WITNESSES TO TRAGEDY Many years on, the statue of 1975 "Bongbongbong" victims in Bantayan village, Benguet, remains a reminder of the massacre. The statue was built at a cost of P100,000 by the Bantayan village council, which, with the help of the Philippine Red Cross, raised the statue to honor the victims. (PHOTO BY JIMMY L. LACOR)

Death, darkness, destruction

Unthinkable, US exec says of storm damage

NEW YORK—Japan's "family" the most devastating to disaster in the most densely populated region, killed more than 100 people, cut off modern communication, and left millions without power on Monday as darkness and rain fell their devastated homes scattered with debris—the worst since 1994.

Although the Japanese government has been quick to respond, it is still unclear how many people are still missing. The Japanese government has been quick to respond, it is still unclear how many people are still missing.

Nice and decent burial also for pets

By Phyllis-Clare
 Bang, Cebu

WHERE two pet-friendly clients of mine reside in Marikina, heavy rainwater simply poured a hole and dirt into the ground.

The rainwater poured down the drain and into the ground, creating a hole in the ground. The rainwater poured down the drain and into the ground, creating a hole in the ground.

Asian countries battle drug-resistant malaria

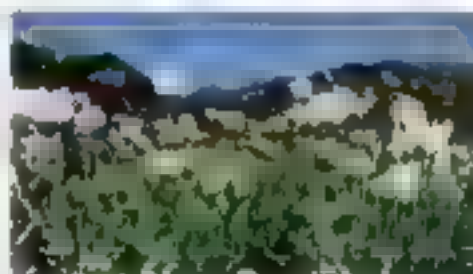

Asian countries are battling a resurgence of drug-resistant malaria, with the World Health Organization (WHO) warning that the disease is spreading rapidly across the region. The WHO reports that in 2010, there were 1.2 million cases of malaria in Asia, with 150,000 deaths. The disease is caused by a parasite that is resistant to the drugs used to treat it, and it is spreading from rural areas to urban centers. The WHO is urging countries in the region to take action to control the disease, including improving surveillance, increasing access to effective drugs, and implementing measures to prevent the spread of the parasite.

Less drug-resistant malaria is spreading across Asia.

Asia drug boom fuels surge in opium

The rapid growth of the Asian pharmaceutical industry is fueling a surge in opium production and trafficking. The industry's demand for raw materials, including opium, has led to a significant increase in production in countries like Afghanistan and Myanmar. This has resulted in a surge in opium trafficking into the region, posing a major public health and security threat. The industry is also contributing to the development of a black market for pharmaceuticals, which is further exacerbating the problem.

Opium production is surging in Asia, fueling the drug boom.
